

A POSTCARD TO HOME

Archaeological excavations at Vindolanda, a fort on Hadrian's Wall, revealed lots of wooden tablets covered in Roman writing. Soldiers and their families had used the tablets to write letters. Some letters asked for military supplies or issued orders for soldiers. But others included invitations to parties, or stories about daily life. One soldier asked his parents to send socks. Maybe he had worn through his old ones or hadn't packed enough!

Imagine you are a Roman soldier living and working on the Antonine Wall. What do you think it was like? What might you miss from home? What would you want someone to send to you?

Use the postcard below to write a letter to someone.

A POSTCARD TO HOME

What would you want to show your friends and family about your life as a Roman soldier on the Antonine Wall?

Would you want to show them the views from the fort?

Or what about the room that you live in?

Maybe a picture of you on guard duty with your friends?

Use the space below to draw a picture on the front of your postcard. Make sure to add lots of details so that your friends and family learn lots about life on the Antonine Wall.
